

Editorial

We are pleased to announce that Archives of Health Science and Research (AHSR) is moving to continuous publishing (CP) from 2025.

The CP model is a system that allows articles to be published quickly in real time after the peer review process is completed and approved by the editorial board, instead of waiting for articles to be published at certain intervals, for the benefit of authors and readers.

From now on, The Archives of Health Science and Research will be published as a single issue for one year. Journal article grouping system, instructions to authors and other publication policies will be maintained.

The digital object identifier (DOI) and citation format of the article will no longer include page numbers, but will be permanently cited with the year, volume and an electronic identification number.

We believe that this innovative model will be appreciated by all authors and readers and we hope to contribute to the increase of scientific knowledge.
